FAINT HEARTED REFORM.

Regarding the communication of Harvey Losee in your issue of March 20 I beg leave to suggest that he himself gives the real reason for our "sloppy" English. He says, "At one house I am obliged to say quinine and bronchitis with a long T because my patients do." There you have it. The educated man accepts the patois of the probably unaccepts the patois of the probably uneducated for the sake of convenience or for business reasons. He is interested in eforms, both of spelling and pronouncing, but by his own confession swims with the tide and allows his less educated "casuals" to dominate his language. It appears to me that he is an unimportant factor in either of the reforms he advocates. Why should he not eliminate some of the 6's from his name?—Harvy Lose, for instance. Harvy is all right, but some one guesses for me on the last name. From my own point of view I would never have Sarah Gamp's "cowcumber" out out of our written or spoken language.
